THE LATEST NEWS.

The principal matter of interest in the Senate to-day was the President's veto of the bill affecting the Supreme Court. Its reading occupied a few minutes, and on the completion of the reading was received with applause by the galleries, which was promptly suppressed by the chair. When the Vice President announced the question to be whether the bill should pass the objections of the President to the contrary notwithstanding, Mr. Conkling rose and said: I desire to say a few words on this question. I do not know that I can give to the country a reason for the faith that is in me, which the President has not given for the faith that is in him; but I do not feel as he does, that the bill is unconstitutional. I do not feel as he does, that it is inexpedient. I do not feel as he does, that it is unnecessary. I do not feel as he does, that it is unwise. I do not feel as he does, that it is dangerous. I do not feel as he does, that it is oppressive. I do not feel as he does, that it is tyrannical. I do not feel as he does, that it is revolutionary. I do not feel as he does, that it is destructive. I do not feel as he does, that it is anything which should induce me to vote against it. I do not feel as he does, that it is anything which should induce me to vote against it. I do not feel as he does, that it is anything which should induce me to vote against it
